This third edition examines the EU's Third Internal Market package, which marks a watershed in the EU's efforts to introduce effective liberalization of its electricity and gas markets. It comprises five separate legal acts that introduce new rules on: more effective unbundling, requiring real and effective separation of the transmission company from generation/supply and the introduction of the choice between ownership unbundling, ITS, ISO, and ISO+  new additional powers for national energy regulators  a new European Agency, ACER, that brings together national energy regulators  new transmission bodies, ENTSOE, and ENTSOG, that will be able to take more concentrated and effective action to develop common rules that will result in better market integration  a new streamlined decision-making process, in which the new Agency and TSO bodies play a leading role, in developing common codes and rules  new rules on network planning and on customer protection
