And yes, if you're writing about communications, the latter matters. Beginning with a hypothetical case, each chapter proceeds through various issues within a specific topic. Zelezny then illustrates each issue with examples of the court cases that created the precedents with which we now live as law. Some of the issues he raises will also likely raise your blood pressure, especially if you are a complete or nearly complete free speech advocate. He makes it abundantly clear that we do not have a right to free speech and expression in the United States unless we are willing to defend it. Even then, a defense through the courts may not be enough to ensure our rights. I think James Madison would cry if he knew the current state of the First Amendment. 0 of 0 people found the following review helpful. Great book for learning through examples By Vx2Kent Years after buying this I still keep it for references to case law in my office! Very enjoyable for a text book and easy to comprehend. 0 of 0 people found the following review helpful. Almost newBy ryanlinI have used it for text book for my Media course. It worked well except for different page number with the new edition that my teacher was using. There are some marks on the book, but that was actually helpful with my studying. Thanks a lot.

The new edition of COMMUNICATIONS LAW continues with the reviewer-praised readability, coverage of core topics, and currency that have been its consistent strengths. The author's interesting, hypothetical exercises have been a favorite among both professors and students. As in previous editions, the Fifth Edition includes a thorough update of cases and information to keep the text current.

About the AuthorJohn D. Zelezny, an attorney and senior public relations executive, has extensive experience in both academia and the professional world of communications. His varied career began as a small-town newspaper reporter in the 1970s, later encompassed 15 years as a professor of media law and journalism at three West Coast universities, and eventually led to his employment as a corporate executive and strategic communications adviser to CEOs and boards of directors. He is a member of the State Bar of California, and currently serves as senior vice president and chief communications officer for Community Medical Centers in Fresno, Calif. He is a frequent lecturer on communications law and the author of complex First Amendment problems for law-school advocacy competitions. Mr. Zelezny holds degrees from Humboldt State University and the University of the Pacific's McGeorge School of Law.
